stresses, the physiological and biochemical alterations in the cells red of plants that ultimately decrease the yield of wheat. Therefore, nov sustainable wheat production under the changing climate to ensure fo the ever-increasing population of the world. There are two ways to a abiotic stresses in sustainable wheat production. These are (i) develop wheat cultivars by molecular breeding, speed breeding, genetic engi approaches such as clustered regularly interspaced short palindromic and (ii) application of improved agronomic, nano-based agricultural t smart agricultural technologies. The development of stress-tolerant v global biodiversity and using molecular breeding, speed breeding, gene editing approaches such as CRISPR-Cas toolkit is considered t sustainable wheat production in the changing climate in major wheat-This comprehensive review updates the adverse effects of major a the potentials of some novel approaches such as molecular breeding engineering, speed breeding, nanotechnology, and improved agronce wheat production in the changing climate.
